

Andrea Saldanha: Fellowship of Christian Athletes

This year, I joined a club at my school called Fellowship of Christian Athletes, or FCA. I joined because I felt the calling to get more involved in growing my faith with my friends and helping other as well. Not only did I want to go to the monthly huddles, but I felt a call to go even further and become a student leader. We meet up every week to discuss and plan the next guest speaker to come to our school and talk about a Gospel message and connecting it to our everyday lives as high school students.

I believe that the Catholic teaching being displayed is the Call to Family, Community, and Participation because I joined an organization to help improve the well-being of my community. Additionally, I see myself continuing my participation in FCA for the rest of highschool because of the satisfaction I feel while helping others grow their faith and growing mine as well.
